Hot Shot From Dickie.

Here are two very good things from Dr. Dickie's speech in the joint debate between him and Mayor Rose on the saloon question in Milwaukee:

"I chance to have in my possession some rather interesting facts, concerning which of course, you will have a full explanation later on. I hold in my hand a copy of the Milwaukee Sentinel date Feb. 23, 1909. It gives account of the mayor's marching club on a tour through the South."

"It gives a detailed statement of the violation of prohibitory laws in the city of Birmingham, Ala. It professes to have been written for the party reached Birmingham. It was, however, by some bit of strange poetical license, published in Milwaukee on Feb. 23, when the mayor and his party arrived in Birmingham Feb. 25."

"And as though that were not enough to discredit the article, when I turn to the inner page, where the article is concluded, I find that the man who wrote the article goes on to say that the legislature is in session in Birmingham and that the Mayor and the marching club had the pleasure of visiting the legislature in session. As a matter of fact no legislature had been in session there, because it meets in Montgomery and had adjourned a month before the Milwaukee party went South. (Laughter and applause.)"

"I fear that the beer that makes Milwaukee famous, sometimes makes Milwaukeeans befuddled. I am simply trying to show you that the traffic is not very reliable when it comes to defending itself."

"I have in my hand a letter taken from another paper which is published in New Orleans. Press of time makes it impossible for me to read that letter; but it is a letter written in Milwaukee, signed by the Fred Miller Brewing Co., a G. Paul manager of the advertising department, and proceeds to tell the editor of the Times Democrat that unless they suppress prohibition news they cannot expect to receive advertising patronage from this particular brewing house, or for that matter, any other."

"I am here to say that a business which tries to tell the editor of a great metropolitan newspaper that unless he suppresses the truth they will boycott his advertising columns—a business that will do that is an infamous business (Applause). It is a dangerous business; it is an American business; it is a business that ought to die, and that speedily."—Illinois Issue.

THE YOUNG COLONEL.

By EVON DOLSBAR.

(Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.)

"Father, what's the matter? There is something on your mind."

The daughter of Baron Ballenstein had just come in from a gallop on horseback over ditches and hedges and was bespattered with mud. Her cheeks were flushed with exercise; a thick coil of hair had come unloosened and was resting on her shoulder.

"I have been notified, my dear, that I must be enrolled in the military service and go out to fight the king's battles. I am too old to do such duty, and we are too poor to provide a substitute. About all we have left is our title of nobility, and as you are all girls even that will pass from us at my death."

"Don't worry, father, dear; we'll find some way out of the trouble."

A few days later a youth, evidently about eighteen, sailed forth from the baron's estate, walked briskly to the town and presented himself at a recruiting station. He gave his name as Caspar, son of Baron Ballenstein of Ballenstein castle. The recruiting officer rose respectfully at the announcement.

"I did not know the baron had a son," he said.

"I have been long away," replied the youth.

Caspar Ballenstein was enrolled in the cavalry and sent to a barracks for instruction and drill. A son of the house of Ballenstein could not be permitted to remain in the ranks, and young Caspar was soon promoted to be a subaltern officer. He was rapidly advanced, and in the first fight that occurred in which he took part most of the field officers were killed, and he was made major. This gave him the command of his regiment while still a mere boy.

Naturally one so young in so high a position excited much attention in the army. It was especially remarked that the officer, though brave and dashing, was one of those men who from some congenital cause are effeminate. His quick expressions often excited merriment. Instead of saying to a brother officer, "You're a chump!" he would say, "You are very disagreeable!" instead of swearing at any bit of luck he would exclaim, "How provoking!"

And notwithstanding his leadership in battle, in camp he was considered a lax disciplinarian. His men came to consider almost any tale of woe to the major quite enough to excuse any neglect or infraction of duty. Another trait gave dissatisfaction. He invariably preferred and made companions of men who had a certain swagger about them, a fine presence and handsome figures and faces.

Nevertheless the little major or colonel—for he finally gained that rank—was adored by his men, who would follow him right into the jaws of death. True, he was not an adept at tactics nor did he have much head for maneuvering, but these he did not need.

General Sweetzer commanded the brigade of which Ballenstein's regiment formed a part. Sweetzer was one moment disgusted with the colonel of the Tenth Hussars and at another delighted with him. The time came when he began to give orders to his subalterns gently. He excused those blunders in which the colonel was deficient. And at last it came to be noticed that instead of sending the Tenth to do necessary sacrificial work he was prone to choose some other corps. Ballenstein noticed this and pronounced it "real mean," of course drawing forth a burst of laughter that brought a tear to the boy colonel's eye.

The truth is the colonel suspected that Caspar Ballenstein was a woman. He had no doubt that his suspicion was correct, but he could neither prove it to himself nor any one else without what might outrage a woman's most sacred feelings. He thought of privately asking the question of Ballenstein, but in case the answer were in the negative the act would be an insult that could only be wiped out by blood. He finally determined that he could only discover if the young officer were a woman by placing him in a position where he would act according to sexual instinct.

One day General Sweetzer invited his regimental commanders to dine with him. His headquarters were at the time in a house, and of course, the dinner was set in the dining room. All the courses had been served, and coffee and cigars were being brought on. When the door was opened to admit the servant with the coffee the general's stalker let in a tiny animal and immediately closed the door.

"A mouse!" a mouse! cried the general, rising. None of the other officers moved except Ballenstein, who jumped upon his chair and from there on to the table. Then the general ordered the mouse driven out, and Colonel Ballenstein descended from his perch.

Nothing was said in the command about the incident. General Sweetzer having ordered the secret kept, but the next morning it was announced that the colonel of the Tenth Hussars had resigned and his resignation had been accepted. The colonel was not seen again in camp. A few hours after General Sweetzer's dinner party had broken up a carriage drove up to Ballenstein's tent, a muffled figure entered and was driven away. This was the only circumstance that became common talk with those who discussed the young officer's sudden resignation and disappearance.

Simultaneous with this affair a daughter of Baron Ballenstein who had been absent on a visit returned to the castle.

The greatest statesman this continent ever produced said: "If I work in marble, in time it will crumble; if I work with brass, in time it will corrode; but if I work with the mind, I work with that which will grow brighter through all eternity." This was but an anticipation of the English philosopher's statement: "On earth there is nothing great but man—in man there is nothing truly great but mind."

See Mother Grow Young.
"It would be hard to overstate the wonderful change in my mother since she began to use Electric Bitters," so writes Mrs. G. H. Patrick of Danforth Me. "Although past 70 she seems really to be growing younger again. She suffered untold misery from dyspepsia for 20 years. At last she could not eat, drink nor sleep; doctors gave her up to die and all remedies failed till Electric Bitters worked such wonders for her health." They invigorate all vital organs, cure liver and kidney troubles, induce sleep, impart strength and appetite. Only 50c Sold by W. J. Sedberry.

We hereby inform our patrons and others who may be interested that we are now prepared to furnish them with Murray's Vegetable Blood Purifier and Murray's Balm for the Lungs and Kidneys. We have sometimes been unable to keep a supply of these wonderful remedies, but have now made arrangements that will insure us against any further trouble of this kind. Mr. Murray states that the principle nerve remedy is very scarce, but thinks he will be in a position to fill all orders promptly in the future, and we sincerely hope that he may, as his remedies are proving a blessing to thousands of weak people who had nearly lost hope.
